WEATHER

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

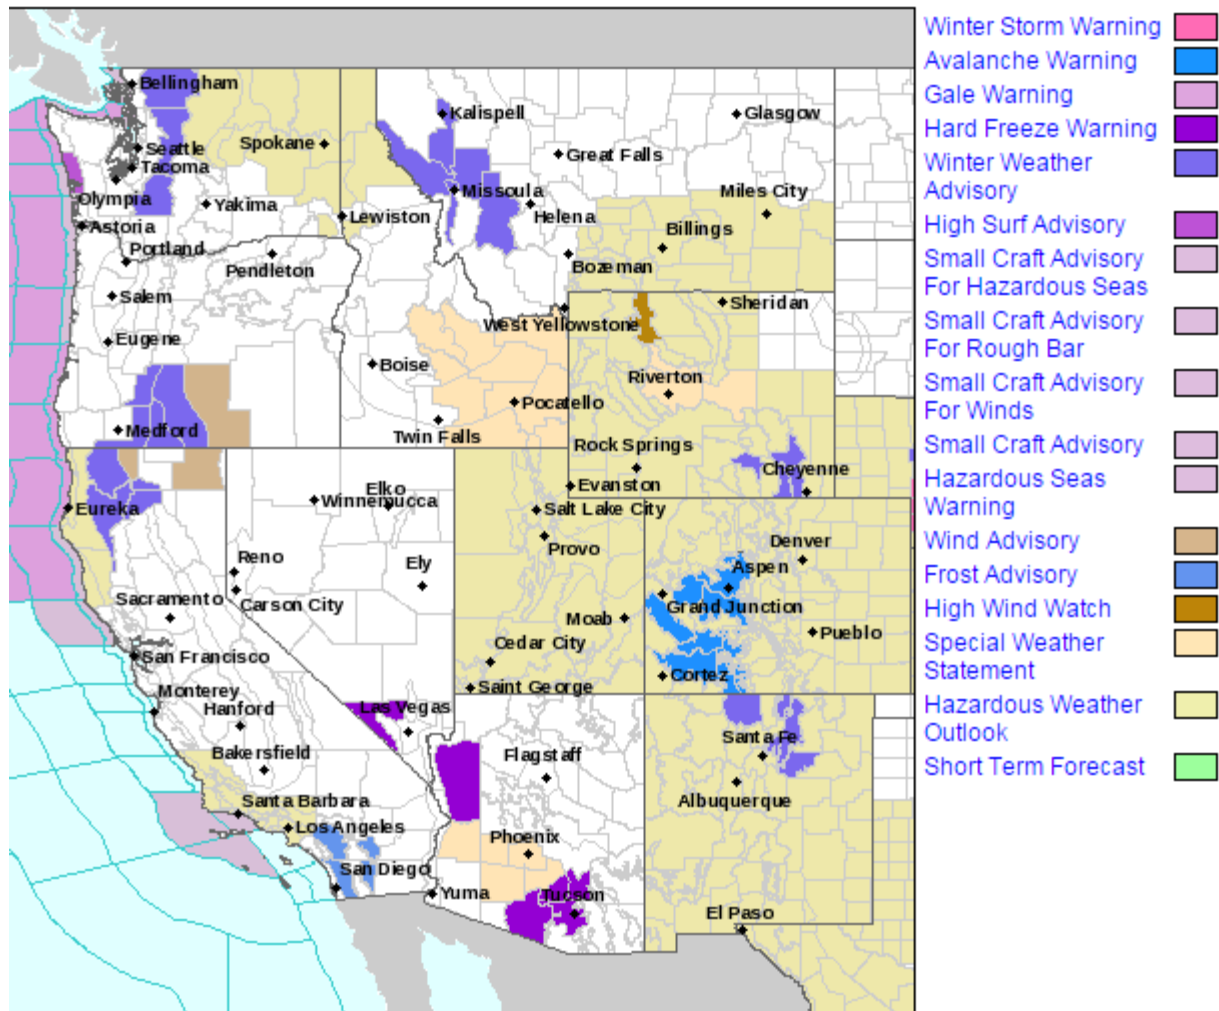

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

A weak low pressure system is moving through Northern California. The main area of precipitation is exiting the region to the southeast, but scattered mountain showers are expected to continue through the rest of the day. Snow levels are 1500-2500 feet. Rainfall and snowfall amounts will be light. The next system will move onshore Wednesday morning with light to moderate rain and south to west winds gusting to 20-30 mph. Snow levels will be 3500-5000 feet with that one, and the most precipitation will fall over the coastal counties and northwest mountains. The precipitation from this second system will end by early Thursday as a high pressure ridge approaches the coast. High pressure will be over the region until late Friday. A weak frontal system will brush the northern end of the region Friday night and Saturday with light to moderate rain while the remainder of the region remains dry and warmer with sunny skies in the south and cloudy skies toward the north. The high will strengthen back over the area Sunday through the middle of next week. Temperatures will rise to 10-15 degrees above normal and north to east winds will gust to 25-35 mph from the western Sierra slopes to the coast with this pattern.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

A couple of troughs moving inland across the Pacific Northwest will bring scattered showers with less than a tenth of an inch of rainfall to Central California from a Monterey/Fresno County line northward today and again Wednesday night. The snow level will be around 5,000 feet. Temperatures will remain below normal through Wednesday, but will warm a few degrees each day. Maximum temperatures will be in the mid 30s to mid 40s across the mountains and in the 50s to low 60s in the valleys today. A significant warming trend will occur Thursday through early next week as a strong ridge of high pressure builds into California from the Pacific. Temperatures will rise to above 80 degrees across the valleys of Southern California by Sunday. Northeast to east winds of 15 to 30 mph with gusts to 50 mph will surface across the mountains and below the canyons and passes of Southern California at times Thursday night through early next week. Minimum humidity will be mainly between 12% and 25% away from the San Joaquin Valley Friday through early next week.
